

Witchcraft! If this conjures up pictures of ancient ladies on broomsticks ,frightening black cats and bubbling cauldrons then you should read Chris Elgood's books on the subject. His lead character Nshila Ileloka couldn't be more different. From her beginnings in Central Africa, by way of a "spell" as an apprentice to a local wizard/medicine man she manages to go through high school and on to LSE where she graduates. Like many students she needs to supplement her college grant and uses her knowledge of the supernatural supplemented by her experiences in Europe to make money as a rain consultant. If one is planning an outdoor event the possibility of rain on the day takes on great significance. Does one insure or not? Call Nshila and get advice, and maybe she can be more positive in her predictions than the Met. Office. One thing leads to another and through a college acquaintance she is asked to dispose of a cruel and obnoxious man. How does she resolve the problem? By a blend of science and witchcraft of course.

Chris has written three books "Accidental Assassin", "He only died twice" and "The Eager Apprentice".

Hope you enjoy them.
